Regional Assembly to go Virtual on October 2-3

The Indiana Regional Board has reaffirmed the time for our next Regional Assembly but has changed the “place.” Instead of gathering at the Warren Performing Arts Center in Indianapolis as previously announced, the 2020 Regional Assembly will be virtual on the Internet. Regional Assembly Program Chair Will Jewsbury made the proposal to the Board and they concurred that this was the wisest choice to protect the health and safety of our members. And it is an exciting choice as well. Some creative options are emerging that will link our members together and maintain the spirit of our Assemblies.

Disciples Women will have the opportunity to gather on Friday evening, October 2, at 6:30 p.m. EDT for a Women’s Event using Zoom Meeting. The event will provide the opportunity for Indiana women to engage in dialogue with one another and with our keynote speaker, Rev. Lisania Martínez, from San Luis Potosí, México. The biennial business meeting will also occur.

On Saturday morning, October 3, the Regional Assembly will happen in three 45-minute sessions at 9:00, 10:00, and 11:00 a.m. EDT. The 9:00 a.m. session, using Zoom Webinar, will be our biennial business session led by Moderator Julia Johnson. This session will include consideration of some proposed changes to our Regional Constitution.

At 11:00 a.m. we will move to a worship service with Rev. Terri Hord Owens, General Minister and President as our preacher. This service will be streamed simultaneously on several social media platforms. Chris Higgins, Director of Music at Allisonville Christian Church, is producing this web event and will be coordinating an All-Assembly Choir who will sing for the service.

There is no registration fee to participate in the Regional Assembly, but you need to register to receive the links to participate. You may register for all assembly events at this web address: http://indianadisciples.org/regional-assembly-2020

Don’t miss the chance to be part of our Region’s first ever virtual Regional Assembly. Reserve October 2 and 3 on your calendar today.

Lisania Sustaita Martínez to be Regional Assembly Keynoter

Disciples of Christ pastor from San Luis Potosí, México will provide the keynote address for our Regional Assembly and will also serve as the speaker and special guest for the Women’s Event. Lisania Sustaita Martínez is the pastor of a rural congregation outside of her hometown of San Luis Potosí in central México. A lifelong member of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) she is also a licensed nurse and an elementary school teacher.

Indiana Regional Logo
Facemasks Available

To honor our clergy, the Indiana Regional Board recently distributed to each of our ministers a facemask that displays our Regional logo. In the letter accompanying the masks Regional Moderator Julia Johnson said it was a gift to say thank you to the pastors for being frontline, essential workers in this time. “May you feel the prayers and strength of the gathering of spirits when you wear this mask in your community. May you know you are not alone in the work and call of our church in Indiana.”

And you, too, can have a matching mask! While supplies last you can order your own, or one for everyone in your household, for $5 each. The reusable polyester/cotton blend masks have adjustable ear straps, nose wire, and are machine-washable. They may be ordered at this web address: https://wmt.suran.com/main/preview/9642

Back in mid-March we were ready to send the Spring issue of the Indiana Christian to the printer and all of a sudden the world changed. We quickly pulled an article off the front page and dropped in a box that said “COVID-19 Coronavirus Forces Congregations to Suspend Regular Worship Patterns.” That headline was truer than we could have known. Since March, the life of all of congregations and our society as a whole, has changed. Sadly, we have grieved the death of members of our congregations and waited for the recovery of others who have contracted the virus. As this issue goes to press, we do not know how long we will be dealing with this great challenge, but it is likely to be longer than we can imagine.

This is not the first time the world has dealt with a pandemic. In mid-14th century the “Plague” swept across Asia and Europe devastating the population and eventually causing the death of half the population. The Plague continued to come in waves over several centuries. It resurfaced during the time of Martin Luther in Germany in the early-16th century.

Understandingly this dread disease caused people to be anxious. Johann Hess, a prominent leader of the Reformation, wrote to Luther in 1527 and asked if it was necessary to be anxious. Johann Hess, who were similarly bound by their responsibilities for public health, but that others could evacuate their community to avoid exposure to the disease. His words to his friend provide a helpful guide even today as we see how he attempted to lean on both faith and science to guide his actions. He said, “I shall ask God mercifully to protect us, has expected of me and so I am not responsible for either my own death or the death of others. If my neighbor needs me however; I shall not avoid place or person, but will go freely as stated above. See this is such a God-fearing faith because it is neither brash nor foolhardy and does not tempt God.’ (from the letter addressing “Whether One May Flee from a Deadly Plague” written to Rev. Dr. Johann Hess) Luther is essentially saying “wear a mask.” One should not be negligent and inadvertently inflict harm on others. We are called to care for our neighbor by protecting their health and safety.

Now as this issue of the Indiana Christian goes to press our attention is drawn to our nation’s original pandemic—racial injustice. The tragic death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, alongside other senseless deaths on the streets of our cities, has awakened us in a new way to the chronic illness of systemic racism in our society. We have known but have too often chosen not to acknowledge the disparity of opportunity for persons of color in our society, and the privilege inherent to those who are white. Perhaps now, in this strangest of years, there is an opportunity to face this challenge and begin to rectify and dismantle the injustice that is built into our society, and too often built into our bones.

Addressing racism is essential work and from it no one of us has permission to flee. Wrestling with this issue requires our deliberate attention and engagement. When the Regional Board met in June we wrote together a statement on racism. You can read it in this issue on the opposite page. I think writing that piece was some of the hardest and best work our Board has ever done. It required that we listen closely to one another and choose our words with care. It compelled us to be responsive to our neighbor, both those sitting by our side and anonymous ones in our life whose names we have failed to learn.

No one of us will ever forget this year and the confluence of events that have changed how we live. There is no doubt that 2020 will be remembered with deep sighs in the years to come. But 20/20 is also the standard we use for good vision. I pray that as we move from this year into the next we are able to claim that we have seen ourselves and our world in a fresh way and begun to change our patterns of living to assure the health, safety, and opportunity of our neighbor.†

Blessings on you and your congregation,

Indiana Regional Board Statement on Racism

As leaders of the Christian Church in Indiana, and people of faith, we are reminded to “speak out on behalf of the voiceless, and for the rights of all who are vulnerable.” (Proverbs 31:8 CEB) We lift our hearts in grief at the slaying of George Floyd on the streets of Minneapolis, an act of violence inflicted on him not only by four police officers but a society that devalued his personhood due to his race.

We lament
  • that his name is added to far too many others whose lives have been unjustly taken, including most recently Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia, and Breonna Taylor in Louisville.
  • that our nation still allows inequity and discrimination to reign unchecked.
  • that we have offered only faint support to the oppressed among us, ignoring Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s 1963 plea to the church from his Birmingham jail cell.

We pray
  • for the families who have lost their loved ones.
  • for those who, like Rachel of the Bible, find themselves weeping inconsolably.
  • for those throughout our society who fear for their personal safety, wondering if they or their loved ones will arrive home safely each day.

We confess
  • that some of us have enjoyed privilege and power at the expense of others.
  • that we have failed to listen to the stories of those who have experienced racial violence.
  • that we have failed to speak, and our silence has left siblings of color without allies as they are denied the justice and opportunity our nation ostensibly promises to all.

We commit
  • to expanding our anti-racism training beyond our congregation to congregational members of every age.
  • to support the efforts of groups seeking to raise the consciousness of our nation, including the Poor People’s Campaign led by Disciples minister Rev. William Barber.
  • to holding public officials accountable for the abuse of power, supporting those who offer peaceful protest with our presence, our voices, and our votes.

We invite
We invite the ministers and members of our congregations to join us in humble reflection and committed action, to dismantle the structures of racism as they exist within our church and our nation,
  • until all are as angry about injustice as those who have suffered its effect so long,
  • until seats at the table move beyond tokenism and all God’s people are equally valued, and
  • until God’s justice rolls down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream.

"Lisa" is one of the first Disciples women ordained among the Mexican Disciples, alongside Bere Gil Soto, her hometown friend, who now serves Iglesia Hermandad Christiana in Indianapolis. Lisa obtained her Master of Divinity degree at the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico and earned the Dean’s Medal for her essay on “Who’s Pastoring the Pastor?” which addressed holistic and mental health concerns for clergy.

Lisa is interested in the way we can reread the Bible from different perspectives, so we can find the importance of validating and celebrating diversity in life, social justice and environmental issues such as animal rights, climate change, and redemption of nature; hoping these issues can turn into common language in church and school. She uses a blend of music, art, and Latin American liberation theology in her preaching and teaching. She says, "I want to preach freedom, relief, mental health and tenderness as much as I preached structures and blind morality when I was a teenager."

And on the side, she is developing a plant nursery at her home and managing the project through social media as a way of interesting people in gardening as a tool for therapy and spirituality. Though she describes herself as an "introvert" you will experience her as a woman of power and conviction. We invite you to meet her at our next Regional Assembly as she helps us think about "Who is My Neighbor?"

dread moving. All the boxes and newspaper. And I am always misplacing the tape. Unpacking is worse. The cabinets are too small for your cookie sheets, and that special piece of furniture doesn’t fit through the door or fit in its space.

When I answered the call to North Christian Church, Fort Wayne, I never imagined that soon after I would unpack, the congregation would begin a deliberate and difficult process to discern their future. After months of deliberation, we realized that if the visible ministry of this congregation was to continue, then it must become a church on the move. So, we contacted a realtor and began to dwell in the Exodus story, because we knew we had some wandering to do.

We spent a year worshipping in a wine-and-canvas space. On our first day, some people felt the space was too secular, on the last day, they saw the same space as sacred with paintings of creation, butterflies, rainbows, crosses, and lions.

That move changed our understanding of sacred space. Then we spent a year and a half worshipping in another church’s building. That move convinced us that we wanted to be a neighborhood church and do community ministry. We were a participant in the Center for Congregations Community Ministry Grant program and made careful plans for 2020 on how we were going to do: a befriender ministry (listening support), a study to help us understand childhood trauma, a seminar on understanding poverty, and Anti-Racism/Pro-Reconciliation training.

On Palm Sunday, our congregation had a full worship service on Facebook live and a Zoom coffee hour. It was that Sunday that we unofficially came to consensus that we would suspend in-person worship indefinitely.

Because we were locked down, we were able to accomplish our week-long Befriender Ministry Leader training and roll out our first training series. We have plans to begin our study on childhood trauma and Anti-Racism/Pro-Reconciliation training on Zoom, thanks to a grant from the Indiana Region’s Unity & Witness Commission.

Here’s the amazing thing: in this virtual shift, we moved out of a building again. And in our distancing, we have become closer. We pray together and study scripture and reflect upon it together every day. Those who use Facebook call those who have the printed devotional and they chat and check in. Our church board decided that they’d likely meet by Zoom after the pandemic wanes.

We do miss each other. We miss singing in harmony, and we miss coordinating carry-in dishes. We miss hugging and shaking hands. We’ve had to learn how to do things in a new way. We’ve learned our neighbors’ names (at a good social distance).

I feel we are on an uncharted journey. Nobody knows where we are going, or what it will be like when we get there. This journey reminds me of my great-grandfather’s journey in 1907. He boarded a ship in Scotland, and every day of that journey, he journaled in his diary which included crossed-off appointments for things that were happening on another continent.

When I realized that we are on a journey, too, I went to my calendar and deleted everything from “the before time,” because I really do feel that we will land in a new place where congregational life and community ministry will be different, and I don’t want my memory of the before time to be a barrier in the new time.

I will get through this. And when it is safe, we will gather and we will sing and hug and laugh. We will tell our stories, and we will unpack.
Seeing God in a Pandemic

By Rev. Trey Flowers, Downey Avenue Christian Church, Indianapolis

They didn’t teach you this in seminary, did they? I can’t tell you just how many times someone has asked me that question since March. No, there was most certainly not a course on what kind of camera is most reliable for live-streaming, and no, the curriculum didn’t include a chapter on how to pastor from across the room to a grieving family during a funeral. With every new twist and turn of the ongoing pandemic, it sure would be nice to pull out a textbook and look up the answer of what to do next!

The truth, though, is that no one is prepared for what our world has faced with the Coronavirus. As much as we pastors might wish it otherwise, our churches are no more immune from the pandemic than the salons or restaurants or schools that struggle daily with making decisions about when to close or how to reopen. But as people of faith, we have the gift of being sent out into the world to get resources from the sanctuaries where we worship. Across Indiana, these congregations that mold us and these communities that shape us haven’t gone anywhere; it’s just that—as we pastors might wish it—no more immune from the virus itself, but—just as Elijah learned at Mt. Horeb—God is most certainly in the response.

At Downey Avenue Christian Church, we didn’t know that March 9th would be the last meeting that any of us would have in the same room together for going on five months now. But at our most recent in-person board meeting last March, a retired pastor in the room spoke up and shared the wisdom that—with all of the difficult decisions that will need to be made in the days ahead—the weight of those decisions shouldn’t have to fall on the pastor’s shoulders alone. “If anyone is upset that the church may need to close the sanctuary for a while,” he said, “they need to know that this whole group speaks together with our pastor for the health and safety of everyone in the community” (if you are a lay leader reading this article, please know that, on behalf of all my colleagues, this is exactly the kind of supportive leadership that helps us get through these times).

That very night, Downey appointed a “Coronavirus Response Team” to meet on a weekly basis and continually assess the situation in real time. Our group pays attention to the guidance of health officials, studies denominational resources together, and tracks daily new case data in our county.

The Team put out a survey to the congregation to assess the safety needs and precautions for our own context. Rather than treating in-person worship like a light switch that can just be “turned on,” the team developed a four-phased reopening plan that allows us to slowly and fluidly move from one step to the next based on what is happening at the time. We’ve had high hopes for when and how to reopen safely, though twice we’ve already had to postpone our targeted date for returning.

Yet with each passing meeting, I give thanks to God for a group of lay leaders who understand that these unprecedented times are not a moment to veer from the mission that God has placed before us. Indeed, it is precisely our mission that has guided us through these times together as we work to keep the most vulnerable in our midst healthy and safe.

Since March, however, it’s become increasingly clear that our congregation’s response is not just something that emerged solely from the team of people tasked with making these difficult decisions.

At churches around our region, audio-visual volunteers have sacrificed time and talent to connect with people in a whole new way. The Center for Congregations has offered new grants to support these efforts. The Indiana Disciples region has gathered colleague groups and convened conversations to share wisdom and ideas together. The denomination has worked around the country and around the world to get resources where they are needed most. In all this and more, it’s become clear: God may not be in the virus itself, but—just as Elijah learned at Mt. Horeb—God is most certainly in the response.

Just like your congregation, we at Downey certainly do not have all of the right answers, yet together we’ve learned a lot along the way. So in the end, I suppose the answer to that often-asked question is no, seminaries don’t provide a manual for how to survive a global pandemic. But they teach us to look for God at work in even the most unexpected places. If you keep your eyes open in the days ahead, you might just see something unexpected.
Hoosier Interfaith Power and Light, a mission partner of the Christian Church in Indiana, has announced a new program to help Indiana congregations reduce their energy usage and save money for missions. Called the Thrive Faith Communities Project, the program invites congregations throughout the state to care for creation by reducing the carbon emissions attributable to energy usage in our buildings.

Hoosier Interfaith Power and Light has secured an intern from the Environmental and Sustainability Program at IU to coordinate the program. It is hoped to enlist 100 congregations across the state in an educational and coaching process to help each church achieve significant energy reductions, with anticipation that congregations can achieve a 25% reduction in their energy costs within three years.

Participating congregations will need to form a team to connect with the program. The cost to participate is $200 per year plus a pledge of 10% of the energy savings to Hoosier Interfaith Power and Light.

You can find out more about the program, and enroll your congregation at https://hoosieripl.org/thriving-faith-communities/. For more information contact Terry Bradbury, a member of Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, at tbradbury48@gmail.com.

Commission on Faith Formation Awards Three Grants This Spring

By Rev. Rebecca Sundquist, Commission on Faith Formation

The Commission on Faith Formation approved and awarded three applications for the Faith Formation Designated Fund in May. The following congregations are using these funds to develop and strengthen faith formation in their communities:

- Countryside Christian Church
  (Winchester, IN) - Labyrinth initiative ($5000)

- First Christian Church
  (Bedford, IN) - Children’s Worship & Wonder initiative ($5000)

- Hynsdale Christian Church
  (Martinsville, IN) - Community outreach ministry ($1000)

The Commission congratulates these congregations on these new ministry initiatives and pray God’s blessings upon them as they seek to create these new and meaningful opportunities in faith formation.

If your congregation is interested in learning more about the faith formation grant guidelines, you are encouraged to look them over on the Faith Formation webpage at: http://indianadisciples.org/commissions/ commission-on-faith-formation/indianadisciples.org. The deadline for fall applications is September 10.

In this time of creativity and innovation, may the Holy Spirit bless you with unique ideas for faith formation in your congregation, community and beyond.

On Liberation

By Rev. Doug Collins, Associate Pastor, Allisonville Christian Church, Indianapolis

A s June has now come and gone in this COVID-world, I would be lying if I said I was not a bit bummed that the Indy Pride fest (among many other things) didn’t happen. In years past, it has been a joy to join Allisonville Christian Church to make space at this special event for God’s LGBTQ children and allies to celebrate who they are and stand in solidarity against hatred and bigotry. It’s a blessing to be a part of the Disciples. This church proclaims that all of God’s children are welcome, including those within the LGBTQ+ community, which is still an important message for us as a Christian community to convey to the world.

As our nation continues to grapple with the deep systems of racism on which our laws and governance was built, I can’t help but notice the overlap between the message of Black Lives Matter and the importance of being allies to our LGBTQ+ siblings. Though sexuality and race are different issues and no doubt have their own nuanced challenges, the underlying message through it all is that we are all created and shaped by the pain of the marginalized is not only an injustice which must be addressed for the sake of those whose lives depend on it, but that not doing so truly is to the detriment of the healing and liberation of all God’s children.

I know many congregations in our region are beginning to explore more deeply the sin of white supremacy and how it is that we can be anti-racist, as an institution, and as individuals. A book study I have started at Allisonville, “Me and White Supremacy” written by Layla Saad, is centered around a famous quote by scholar and activist Lilla Watson: “If you have come here to help me you are wasting your time, but if you have come because your liberation is bound up with mine, then let us work together.”

As a faithful people who believe and trust in God, let me assure you that Pride has happened and will continue to happen every time a child is told that they are loved, no matter what. As folks who know Jesus as a friend to us and who are discerning how to follow the Holy Spirit, let me assure you that taking the time to learn more about the privileges we possess as individuals and as a collective will help us better understand what it is we must do to make life better for Black individuals, for indigenous persons and for other communities of color who have far too long borne the brunt of injustice after injustice.

The Good News, friends, is also the challenging news. God loves all of his children, so ours is the task to continue doing the work to make manifest a world in which all are liberated to be all of who we are made to be, no apologies necessary. It will be challenging and sometimes it will make us wonder if things will ever change, but I know that with the agency of humans and the grace of God’s help, liberation for all is possible. So together, let us boldly ask the questions we have been hesitant to ask. Together, let us look within and be honest about our own prejudices and turn to our community for help when we need guidance and understanding.

Take pride in who God made you to be. We were made for healing!

On Truth

By Rev. Toni Colbert, Light of the World Christian Church, (D.Min. Student, Christian Theological Seminary)

Have you heard about the four college friends who decided to take a road trip instead of study for an upcoming final exam? The friends partied so hard that they completely missed taking the final. The friends decided to concoct an elaborate story in order that their professor would allow them an opportunity to take the missed exam. All agreed to say their car had a flat tire and they did not have a spare. The friends also added that no one was available on the road to assist them.

The professor granted them an opportunity to take the exam. What they had not counted on was the professor placing each one in separate rooms to take the exam. The essay question on the first page was easy and worth five points. The college friends were excited because they were able to answer the first question correctly and earned five points. However, upon turning to the second page the essay question was worth 95 points and their excitement turned to dread. The question simply read, “Which tire on your car was flat?” (adapted from Michael Shannon’s illustration on preaching.com)

Jesus spoke often on issues of truth. The Apostle Paul also emphasized Christians “doing” truth. Truth makes us squirm out of our comfort zone. Truth also sets us free from the preoccupation of lies.

Considering the good and not-so-good being cast on society today where do you stand when it comes to truth? Has the ground shifted beneath your feet in any way? Has your voice missed an opportunity to speak out against powers of unfair social systems? As my former pastor, Bishop Tom Benjamin, Jr., says when he closes his radio program, “Think about it.”

As a Christian I ask today which tire on your vehicle is flat? What unjust system have you been supporting? How can you shift this narrative towards truth and life giving? In the spirit of coming together it is not too late for the church of Jesus Christ to assist in turning pain and anguish around.
Women of the Christian Church in Indiana will gather virtually at the Regional Assembly in October to reflect upon this question: “And Who is My Sister?” In so doing, we join the reflection of the assembly, “Who is My Neighbor?” Our focus will be more specifically related to neighbors who are our sisters in Christ.

Leading us in those reflections will be Rev. Lisania Martínez, pastor of Iglesia Cristiana de Porvenir; a congregation in central México near San Luis Potosí. Reverend Martínez will be addressing the group by video, followed by a “live” question and answer session moderated by Linda Brown, President of the Indiana Women’s Council.

The event, scheduled for Friday evening, October 2, will begin at 6:30 p.m. (Eastern Time). There will also be a brief business meeting and recognition of outgoing leadership and installation of new leaders elected during the business session.

Although we will not share a dinner together, attendees are invited to share their recipes or recipes of others from around the Region. The theme is “potluck” dishes. Recipes will be posted on the Disciple Women in Indiana Facebook page. Look for additional information and instructions through Regional communications.

Rev. Martínez comes from a long line of Disciples in México. Her parents are lay pastors, and 18 others in her extended family are serving or have served as pastors. Lisania has served on the Global Ministries Board of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and the United Church of Christ. She has also been an active leader on the Joint Table (Mesa Conjunta), a roundtable for dialogue and mission development among the various expressions of the Christian Church and United Church of Christ congregations in México.

A delegation of Indiana Disciples met Lisania during a pilgrimage to San Luis Potosí last fall. Cheryl Russell, a member of that delegation and pastor of First Christian Church, Noblesville, wrote of that experience: “Pastor Lisania impressed each of us with her thoughtful and powerful sermon. She preached in both English and Spanish which was not only impressive but also a tremendous act of hospitality.”

Join us at Assembly for a fun, informative and spirit-filled event when Indiana women gather virtually on October 2.†

Supporting The Indiana Christian

The Indiana Christian has been in continuous publication since 1891 connecting Disciples of Christ congregations in Indiana with each other and with our mission to the world. Today the publication reaches over 5,300 households, including yours, with news about our church. The paper is supported by a portion of Disciples Mission Fund and by the annual gifts of readers who value this publication for the way it connects and energizes our congregations consistent with our mission as the Regional church. You are invited to use the enclosed envelope to make a gift, of whatever size, to undergird this communication ministry. Creating a Trauma-Informed Church
By Rev. Amie Vanderford, The LabOratory Church, www.TheLabOratoryChurch.org

When my husband and I dreamed of starting a trauma-informed church, we could not have anticipated that our start would coincide with a massive Global Pandemic. In our original vision, we saw the need for this type of mental health church based both upon our personal experiences of trauma and spiritual damage from being excluded and/or harmed by establishment churches, along with the damage caused by the systems of this country, systems based in patriarchy, white supremacy, individualism, competition, and choosing profit over people.

Our country is in a deep level of pain for the majority of people, and we believe that the roots of that pain stem from being divided based upon harmful labels and systems of privilege, that benefit only a few. It is not safe to be different from what our cultural narratives define as normal, which is white, cis-gender, heterosexual, preferably male if in position of leadership, capitalism-loving, nationalistic, polite, and nonconfrontational.

We are taught that speaking the truth is offensive, speaking our pain is attention-seeking and disruptive, and that daring to question the so-called free ideology of this country is anti-patriotic. These values actively conflict with the ability to heal in relationship with other people, as it creates a culture of mistrust and actively pits folks against one another.

In order to heal from trauma, there are two stages that deal with individual healing, yet the third stage deals with healing in relationship with others. While individual therapy is best suited to deal with the first two stages, we believe the church has the perfect opportunity to facilitate and encourage the third stage of healing.

We believe that the first and foremost step in creating a trauma-informed and mental health-focused community is to teach appropriate self-care for individuals while also establishing safety for all people who participate. As leaders of the community, we practice what we preach through attending regular therapy along with questioning our own internal biases while listening to the experiences of others.

The first part of establishing community safety came with writing our Statement of Values. These clearly lay out what we believe, values necessary for healing, and specifically state that we appreciate God’s children in all our many and beautifully diverse forms. We also detailed how we as a community plan to work through conflict, and how we hold one another accountable. We define ‘sin’ as those acts that harm/break relationship with ourselves, others, and God, and we believe in both grace with accountability, and mercy with restorative justice. Cheap grace is not safe, nor is condemnation without the possibility of redemption useful to the health of the larger community.

It is difficult and uncomfortable work to continually examine ourselves and determine what is good for the larger community, but this is the holy work that God calls the Body to do. We are thankful for the growing body of people who want to be a part of the healing in our damaged world.

“I Don’t Want Any Birthday Gifts!”
By Lou Ann Millett, West Street Christian Church, Tipton

It isn’t very often that parents hear their twelve-year-old child declare, “I don’t want any birthday gifts.” Yet, that was exactly what Ethan Sizelove, a 8th grader at Tipton Middle School, told his parents.

Ethan and his mother and stepfather; Andrea and Andy Wesner, attend West Street Christian Church in Tipton, Indiana. Ethan is part of a multi-generational line of West Street Disciples, including grandmother Nancy Silvey and great-grandparents, Bob and Evelyn Wesner.

Though Ethan insisted at his last birthday that “he had too many toys already,” he, nevertheless, did have a request. He asked his family, friends, and his community in Tipton County to donate gently used or new stuffed animals. He wanted to give them to first responders to distribute to children who would experience trauma.

Ethan was keenly aware that some kids have bad experiences like car accidents, fires, illnesses, and domestic violence because he comes from a family of firefighters and nurses. He had heard stories and knew that stuffed animals could give comfort.

Ethan’s idea was spread by friends and family and on social media. Collection boxes were placed around Tipton. People generously filled the boxes—and in time—filled the family’s living room. Ethan’s mom set an end date for collecting and when that day arrived there was “bearly” space for humans.

Ethan sorted the animals and arranged to donate them all over Tipton County. Each of the Township Volunteer Fire Departments, along with fire departments in the county received animals. Donations were also given to the Tipton County Sheriff Department, the Tipton City Police, and the Department of Child Services. He even remembered the children who were a part of Jubilee Christmas at his church.

Ethan is thankful for all who helped him to help others. It was a birthday wish come true. Stay tuned. Ethan is already thinking about his thirteenth birthday wish.

Beechwood Builds Accessible Playground for All
By Ashley Sherard-Clarke, Pastor
Beechwood Christian Church, French Lick, IN

Beechwood Christian Church members, French Lick, Indiana, haven’t let the pandemic slow us down. We began fundraising almost a year ago with the prayer that we would be able to provide an accessible playground for all in our community. We were humbled by the support we received from our community and Disciples congregations from all over the Indiana Region. Just recently, the remaining parts of our beautiful new playground, including a wheelchair swing, were installed. We look forward to the time when we can dedicate and officially open it to the public.
